Statement from 2nd Lt Frederick B. Deeds:

"I was flying No. 2 man on wing of Maj Don M. Beerbower, who was leading 353rd Fighter Squadron on an armed reconnaissance mission. We went down to strafe an airfield North of Reims. Our first pass was from north to south, firing at twin-engine E/A in revetments. I noticed Maj Beerbower got hits on an E/A. We came off the field, circled to the right, and made a pass from east to west to knock out gun emplacements as Blue and Green flights made a pass at planes in revetments. As we came in range, in line-abreast formation, the guns opened fire on us, and we returned the fire. Maj Beerbower silenced one gun and pulled up straight as we left. I saw hits on his wing, and the canopy was gone. The plane was climbing, and it appeared that the Major was hit. The plane climbed until it partially stalled, half-rolled and nosed straight down in a dive, exploding when it hit the ground. The pilot fell free while it was in the vertical dive, but no apparent attempt was made to open his chute."

He was awarded the Silver Star Medal posthumously for his actions on action on 8 April 1944, when he destroyed three German planes and damaged two others out of a numerically superior force which attacked the bomber formation he was escorting.

Maj Don M. Beerbower was first buried at the Temporary American Military Cemetery, Champigneul, France.
