More information

Pfc George Cordie was killed in action January 9, 1945, at Tillet, Belgium. According to a letter received from Pfc Cordie's commanding officer, "Company H, the heavy weapons company, was in support of the rifle company as the attack was being made on the strategic town of Tillet, Belgium, against determined enemy opposition consisting of infantry and machine gun positions, supported by tanks and mortar and artillery fire. Pfc Cordie was killed instantly by shell fragments from an enemy artillery shell. He was buried at U.S.M.C. No. 1 at Foy, Belgium, three miles north of Bastogne.
