More information

2nd Lt Roger J. Brague enlisted in San Francisco, California on 27 April 1942.

On 19 May 44, they flew with the Group on a bombing mission to attack a marshalling yard in Brunswick, Germany. Their position in the Group's formation was on the far right. Always a dangerous position as the Luftwaffe often likes starting at one end, chewing their way across. As they were approaching their target, the 492nd got caught without fighter protection by about 40 German fighters. The wave of enemy FW-190s came in quickly from about one to two o'clock high. Just before the plane fireballed, Lt Wymond, Sgt Dorow and Sgt Kline were able to get out. The blast threw two more men, Lt DeRose and Lt Warakowski, from the plane and they survived and parachuted safely to the ground. Lt. Brague was immediately killed in the initial strike. All of the dead were initially buried in the Lutter Cemetery. After the war their bodies were recovered and buried in US cemeteries.

2nd Lt Roger J. Brague was first buried at Temporary American Military Cemetery Neuville-en-Condroz, Belgium Block N, Row 1, Grave 9.
